HISTORY OF AMSTERDAM

Around the 13th century Amsterdam was a fishing village. According to legends, the city was founded by two fishermen from the northern province of Frisa, who by chance ended up on the banks of the Amstel River in a small boat, along with their dog. The traditional date of the founding of the city is October 27, 1275, when its inhabitants were removed from the obligation to pay tolls, which at that time were associated with Dutch bridges. In the year 1300 it was granted official city rights, and from the 14th century onwards Amsterdam began to flourish as a commercial centre, largely based on trade with other Dutch and German cities, known as the Hanseatic League.
